

MOREHOUSE COLLEGE STEM STUDIES RECEIVES A $9M GRANT FROM THE NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

As one of the nation's top HBCUs Morehouse College has been granted $9M from the National Science Foundation. This grant will go towards helping the college to continue creating educational and employment opportunities for minorities interested in studying STEM fields.

Why Morehouse is an Ideal Recipient for the Grant

Morehouse has an established reputation for producing students who go on to earn doctorates in STEM fields. Receiving this grant will help the school to support minority students who are striving for degrees in STEM. Morehouse has also stated that they will share a portion of the grant with Spelman College, another HBCU that educates women of African descent.

Morehouse has an established reputation for producing students who go on to earn doctorates in STEM fields. Receiving this grant will help the school to support minority students who are striving for degrees in STEM. Morehouse has also stated that they will share a portion of the grant with Spelman College, another HBCU that educates women of African descent.

The college has also pioneered the iSTEM-Xe project. This innovative project helps to encourage young minority students to study STEM fields. Focused on students in 6th-8th grade, the program gives students the chance to work with exciting and challenging STEM projects.

Additionally, the school is also making strides in medical research. The Morehouse School of Medicine is working with UnitedHealth Group to research if there is a link between sickle cell trait and an increased risk of COVID-19 disease.

Learn More About Morehouse College

Ranked #5 on US News and World Reports best HBCUs, Morehouse is known for providing students with quality educational opportunities and for its notable alumni including Martin Luther King Jr., Samuel L. Jackson, and Spike Lee. It is also the nation's only four-year liberal arts college that has a student body that is exclusively all black and all male. Learn more about Morehouse College.